Start Location: Happy Meal Park

The Start

About 30 hounds gathered at Happy Meal Park on a hot, sunny Fourth of July afternoon with only a light, occasional breeze to cool us off. Pound Puppy approached the gathering hounds covered in enough flour to lay another trail. He then gave some of the most confusing explanations for standard hash marks that I've ever heard. Then at 4:44 p.m. the hounds took off heading southeast to the residential neighborhoods.

The Trail

Trail continued southeast zigging and zagging through the neighborhoods until we reached the small residential area just east of Memorial Park. We then headed east zigging in and out between the Bayou and Memorial Drive. Many hounds were tricked into doing numerous "do loops", but those bastard FRB's who just ran straight east on Memorial and didn't follow true trail missed a very scenic and fun trail. The hounds ran by "the Funky Corporation", we ran behind a very Hollywood looking estate called "Orion", and various picturesque areas along the Bayou. Next the Trail went south on Shepard and continued east through Allen Park to skirt the waterfront edge of the Jewish cemetery and end at the east access road for the cemetery. A thankfully not overlong trail (it was hot) through some of the hash's favorite territory, visiting many areas which are not often seen.

The Circle

In honor of Roll Model I arrived at the on home exactly 44 minutes after the start. As promised, the hounds provided four types of beer at our shady ending. We had visitors from Baton Rouge, Uptake from England, and a number of reboots. The hares attempted to "award" supposedly hash related T-shirts, but no one was fooled into taking their spring cleaning. After a relatively short Circle (it was hot and we finished all the beer very quickly) Butt Pirate ended by shooting off bottle rockets out of his ass. He said that that was very common at the Fourth of July Hash in San Francisco.
