The Hunger Trails - Catching Vittles

Hares: Tender Vittles, Speed Bumps, Parson's Nose

First, to give you an idea of the neighborhood, I stopped at a gas station to purchase Four Loko before the run. They had every flavor imaginable, plus ones that I had never heard of. Gotta love the ghetto. Trail wound its way back and forth through forest and shiggy occasionally crossing over streams and under pipelines. I use the term stream loosely here because most of the bottom was covered with disused tires and there were occasional shopping carts and cars in the water. The first beer check was excellent and had many hobo relics for hashers to gaze at. The second was, however, on the edge of a park that was actually a high-tech mosquito farm. I had to jog back and forth while drinking my beer so as not to get eaten. Then we entered the deep shiggy. You know, the kind with the sharp fern/palm things and the invisible thorny vines that wrap around your legs and stop you dead in your tracks. Midway through the thorns, and on top of a fire ant nest, we did, in fact, catch Vittles who swore that "there was a jeep trail around here somewhere." 'Trail' then proceeded out to a large vacant lot that I was informed was once a school. It's closing must have crushed the dreams of many children - a fitting end for the Hunger Trails.

Jennifer Lawrence was not on trail, but shiggy like this was
